“Built for Change: Flexibility, Technology and Resilience in Healthcare”

Healthcare is undergoing continuous transformation. Changing care delivery models, emerging technologies, workforce challenges, financial pressures, and evolving patient expectations are reshaping how healthcare facilities are planned, designed, constructed, and operated.

The theme, “Built for Change: Flexibility, Technology and Resilience in Healthcare” recognizes that healthcare facilities must do more than meet today’s needs. They must be designed and delivered to adapt to tomorrow’s challenges while maintaining operational effectiveness, patient-centered care, and long-term value.

This symposium will explore how healthcare organizations, planners, architects, engineers, contractors, and industry partners can create facilities that are flexible, technologically adaptable, financially responsible, and resilient. Through presentations, case studies, and lessons learned, speakers will examine strategies for improving project delivery, responding to economic uncertainty, integrating technology, and preparing facilities for future healthcare demands.

The goal is to move beyond designing facilities for a single point in time and toward creating healthcare environments that can evolve with the people, technologies, and services they support.

The Health Facility Institute requires all presentations to be educational in nature.

No marketing for any particular company or individual is accepted. HFI reserves the right to reject any presentation based on this premise.

HFI waives the registration fee for up to two (2) faculty members. Additional speakers will register and pay the general registration fee.
